Ozymandias is an imp, or goblin, living in the valley near Detritiville. He scavenges for supplies he can sell to various vendors in the nearby towns and buy items to survive the harsh conditions that plague the land. When he finds an ancient book with a strong auras, he's immediately drawn into a world of intrigue and adventure that will span the continent to discover the true origins of the book. Same as my previous project, The Valley Where Dreams Die, this map features a complete base and 4 dungeons, along with ample npcs to interact with. The base itself is not much to look at, but the dungeons have all the effort, environment and detail put into them, with plenty of secrets to find for those that dare to go there. As usual, this map uses all the flora in its environments, and the first thing you'll notice is the strong sense of atmosphere that permeates the entire map. The special twist this time is the inclusion of a Water and Air elemental NPC for the first time. Now, instead of having to wait for NPCs to respawn in a dungeon, you'll want to head to the nearby room to interact with them. The 'doors' are permanent, but can be opened with the 'escape' key to enter the dungeon, and respawn once closed. Welcome to the Cave City, a large and ancient underground hive-of-crime from the Giant Mushrooms! A large network of twisted tunnels and caverns form this mischievous dungeon, and the main hub of the city itself. This map features a large and complex base and 4 dungeons, along with ample npcs to interact with. The final dungeon features a hidden 'special event' after all main dungeons are completed, but that's for another time. This map uses a variety of items, such as the infamous Giant Mushrooms! The first thing you'll notice are the oddly glowing and translucent mushrooms that rise up from the tops of every tile in the map. These can be used to hide your presence, obstruct cross-paths, and open secret passages. The Water and Air elemental NPCs will help enhance the overall ambiance, and can be found in most rooms. The base itself contains a large inn, as well as a large library and shrine. Oh, and don't worry, we'll tell you more about it later! (Note: I may have forgotten some things, so please forgive me for the missing

What's new:

The Song of Eos is an epic poem attributed to Hesiod around 700 BC. It was composed of the result of texts that Hesiod had received. Three of these, however, were his own: He had 'written'. 'Something' (ἐγγεγαίνων) was the first; part of it was retrieved by his grandson Glaucus from the Chalybians (Chalybes), who were in the service of the Thebans. He 'kindled' (ἐνδώκαμαι) the second; this was revealed to him by Psyche ('Grass-gatherer') daughter of Celeus and Zetes, while he was toiling in Phrygia. The third piece had been entrusted to him by the Sibyl of Delphi: he had received it from him but had not yet rescued it. The first section of the work (I-IX) deals with Thebes at the time of Oedipus. The following section (X-XIX) moves on to mythic times. The final section (XX-XXIV) deals with the warrior race. Hesiod's Greek in the Poem Hesiod's Greek Hesiod frequently uses the forms ἔχω (hoi, w) – such as in ἔῃ νύμφῃ περφόραν (hêi nov mφuro phorân, w.1524) – and πώπερ (pôper, w.666) for the present (present tense). His uses for future (1st and 2nd persons) are rare. He occasionally uses the first-persons in the optative mood (ni-marked as neither affirmative nor negative). This makes his Greek closer to the speech pattern of the so-called military-minded poets of the 4th century BC, e.g. Agron, Euripides and other poets of similar speech pattern, who were in part influenced by Sparta. Hesiod uses the verbs in the indicative mood in the genitive case (e.g. λύθεται – when they are in the genitive case): ἔνι ὄντε
